TSUD HOSTS BLACK HISTORY MONTH ACTIVITIES

The Division of Student Affairs at Troy State University at Dothan hosted Malcolm Newman, Esquire, as a presenter during recognition of Black History Month on the TSUD campus. During his presentation entitled "Revival, Ritual, or Last Rites," he emphasized that black history is our history, no matter what race, creed, or ethnic background, and it should be carefully and thoughtfully respected by all people not only during the month of February but all year long. Shown with Mr. Newman (R) are (L-R) Debora Pettway, counselor for Student Support Services at TSUD; David Johnson, administrative assistant for Student Affairs at TSUD; and Dr. Francina Williams, director of TSUD's AmeriCorps program.

TRIO DAY ACTIVITIES HELD

On February 21, 1995, the TRIO programs from Cluster VI came together at Troy State University at Dothan to recognize National TRIO Day which was officially celebrated on February 25, 1995. The theme for the program was "TRIO: Meeting the Challenge of the 21st Century."

Schools participating in TRIO Day activities were TSUD, Wallace Community College-Dothan, Sparks State Technical College, Enterprise State Junior College, Troy State University-Troy, and McArthur State Technical College. Directors, Student Support Services participants, faculty, and administration from these schools were on hand to recognize the value of TRIO programs to their students.

"Bringing students from the two-year colleges to the TSUD campus provides an opportunity for TRIO participants to experience first-hand the university atmosphere. This integrated activity allows students to participate in the seamless web of educational activities promoted between TSUD and two-year institutions," said Dr. Charlotte Kirkland, director for TSUD's SSS program.

TRIO programs are made possible through the Higher Education Act of 1965. TRIO refers to the original three programs, but now there are five funded through the Higher Education Act: Student Support Services, Talent Search, Upward Bound, Equal Education Center, and Ronald McNair.

TRIO programs are designed to identify promising students (Talent Search), prepare them to do college level work (Upward Bound), provide information on academic and financial aid opportunities (Educational Opportunity Centers), and provide tutoring and support services to students once they reach campus (Student Support Services).

Ironically, at a time when the House Appropriations Committee considers various plans to slice as much as $1.7 billion from money Congress appropriated for education programs in 1995, TRIO teachers, counselors, students, and graduates are seeking a full investment in all TRIO Programs to give an estimated 11 million Americans a realistic chance to participate more fully in America's economic and social life.

AMERICORPS INDUCTION HELD

The Troy State University at Dothan AmeriCorps/OPT (One Problem at a Time) program inducted forty-five (45) members on Friday, February 17, 1995, in Malone Hall on the TSUD campus.

Program participants in the induction ceremony included—Ms. Sherry Anderson, State AmeriCorps representative; Dr. Thomas Harrison, TSUD president; Dr. Jack Sublette, TSUD executive vice president; Dr. Barbara Alford, vice president for Special Programs at TSUD; Ms. Pamela Williamson, director of Counseling Services at TSUD; and Dr. Francina Williams, program director of AmeriCorps.

The AmeriCorps/OPT Program is an innovative program involving TSUD in collaboration with key community organizations, professionals, community volunteers, college students, and youth in solving public safety problems related to violence, crime, and substance abuse. In addition to addressing public safety issues, the program will also present a model for participating youth to assume responsibility for regenerating their communities. Approximately 350 young people will be involved in the local program.

Following the induction, members participated in a series of orientation and specialized training experiences related to AmeriCorps/OPT. The members were then assigned to teams with the participating programs. The teams will teach and guide young people in using problem solving skills to focus on public safety issues identified at each location.

The Adolescent Resource Center, Boys Club of Dothan, Family Services Center, Girard Middle School, Girl Scouts Council, and Hawk-Houston Boys Club are the participating program sites. The Dothan Police Department, Dothan/Houston County Substance Abuse Board, and TSUD Continuing Education Center are training partners for the program.

GRANT MONEY DISTRIBUTED

Grant money in the amount of $10,000, provided by the Alabama Power Foundation, Inc., was distributed by the School of Education at Troy State University at Dothan during a brief ceremony on the TSUD campus.

The grant enables the University to develop a Professional Development School Partnership between the TSUD School of Education and the Dothan and Ozark City School systems.

The Professional Development School Partnership enables students and interns at TSUD to observe, on a regular basis, classroom interaction, techniques, and methods used by the practicing teacher. In turn, students and interns are able to interact with the practicing teachers and not only learn to link theory with practice, but also to extend to the practicing teacher innovative instructional methods learned in the university course work. The greatest benefit is to the young students in the elementary schools who are reaping the rewards of energetic and innovative classroom instruction.

On hand to receive funds were Ms. Debbie Quattlebaum, principal of Thompkins Early Childhood Center, and Ms. Judy Tarter, elementary curriculum coordinator for Ozark City Schools; Dr. Betty Anderson, dean, TSUD School of Education; Dr. Betty Armstrong, principal of Cloverdale Elementary School; and Dr. Diane Murphy, assistant professor of educational leadership and chair of the Executive PDS Committee.

LIBRARIES IN CHINA

Libraries in China, as in Greece, were first organized as official archives and then as centralized government libraries and private libraries. The first royal archive can be traced back to Shang Dynasty (1765?-1123? B.C.) when documents were written on animal bones and tortoise shells, and later on bamboo and silk. However, many of the records were destroyed during one of the most notorious efforts at censorship in 213 B.C. The first Emperor of the unified China ordered that all books that were not in accord with his ideology be burned. The Emperor Wu, his successor (140 B.C.-80 B.C), made great efforts to recover the loss by dispatching officials to search for works of antiquity hidden in private collections. He built the first centralized imperial library with a collection of over 30,000 volumes. The man in charge of this library compiled "Classified Catalog" (26-6 B.C.), the earliest known annotated catalog and the first classification scheme used in China. The invention of paper around 100 A.D. and the movable-type printing technique in the 11th century gave great impetus to the production of books and the development of libraries in China.

After the People's Republic of China was founded in 1949, the government made all-out efforts to develop libraries, but around its goal of building a socialist society. Books that were at variance with Marxism were banned. Libraries, which had been using the Dewey Decimal Classification introduced into China in 1911, switched to the Chinese Classification System, which put Marxism as an independent category of learning above all others. Nevertheless, China has some of the most advanced library programs. Beijing Library, the national library founded in 1928, is one of the largest in the world and the largest in Asia with a collection of over 10 million volumes. Shanghai boasts the largest public library in Asia. Beijing University, the cradle of student movements, is the largest university library in China with a collection of over 4 million volumes. Li Dazhao, the founder of the Chinese communist party, was the one time director of the Library. He also helped Mao Zedong, the founder of the People's Republic of China, acquire a position as library assistant whose job was to carry the periodicals to readers' tables.

Library automation is still at the experimental stage in most Chinese Libraries. Romanization of Chinese characters has helped hasten the process. Leading libraries, such as Beijing Library, have partial online catalogs and access to OCLC and Dialog, two prominent library related online services based in the United States. Efforts have been made to integrate Chinese collections into the universal bibliographic control system. For example, Beijing Library sent its staff to be trained in the US to learn to input the bibliographic information of Chinese materials into the OCLC system. The Chinese library system, carrying with it a history of three-thousand years, is slowly but definitely striving towards the modern information world.
